

Course Description	This global public health study abroad experience course is an opportunity for medical students to experience, engage, and interact with individuals, experts, and institutions in another country to learn more in-depth about their public health and medical systems.
Course Objectives	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Describe and discuss the major sociocultural, historical, and policy issues related to the current state of the specific international location's public health and medical systems.</li> <li>• Evaluate and critique the major public health and medical systems of the specific region using information gathered from local public health and medical systems experts</li> <li>• Develop a global public health initiative on a specific public health and/or medical issue for the local and/or broader geographic area.</li> </ul>
Course Activities	Students will learn about the sociocultural, historical and policy issues related to the specific international location through online lectures via Webcast and Podcast, and independent readings and assignments. Additionally, students will interact with course directors and other students through online discussion board assignments. Students will travel internationally to complete fieldwork, interacting with and learning from experts and institutions for a period of 7 days.
Course Schedule Requirements	No requirements for call, night or weekend clinical requirements

Duration	4 weeks	Location	Rotating International Location
-----------------	---------	-----------------	---------------------------------

Designation	Elective	Revised	12.05.2018
--------------------	----------	----------------	------------